

Newsweek

MOVIES Nobody Loves Me!

Peter Judson directed a documentary called "Nobody Wants Your Film," about a small movie that nobody in Hollywood wanted. The only snag: nobody wanted Judson's movie, either. In 2001, the NYU grad was shooting extra footage for the DVD of an indie film. But that movie, called "13 Moons," never hit theaters, so Judson pieced together his interviews (with actors like Steve Buscemi, Sam Rockwell and Peter Dinklage)

NOT A 'NOBODY': Buscemi

for a collage on why it failed. The challenge: finding somebody to watch "Nobody." Judson booked his documentary in an L.A. theater and advertised online (total cost: $60,000). With more than 200,000 visitors to his site so far, DVDs go on sale this week. Now Judson is planning sites for rejected novelists, artists and musicians. "This is about the disenchanting connecting," he says.

-RAMIN SETOODEH